modify and ensure more acceptable results. As an example, they cite the case of a DO officer who asked for an item which OTS produced only to learn that he had intended, but had not told them, to use the item with one hand in the dark -- peculiarities which made their product useless but which they could have accommodated if they had known. TCB's early involvement would appear to be beneficial, as its employees assert.

We suggest that OTS management reevaluate the status of TCB and its mission to determine if it should continue as an independent branch in SRD or be more closely associated with TCD, and, regardless of location, to ensure that it is properly staffed and given the necessary support to perform its mission.
